From Crisis to Care: A Trauma-Informed Approach to Encampments |

Room: Canyon C

As homelessness continues to rise and public encampments become more visible across communities, crisis response systems are called upon to play a central role in how we address unsheltered homelessness. This session explores a compassionate, coordinated approach to encampment response that emphasizes housing, health, and human dignity.

Participants will examine trauma-informed strategies for engaging individuals living in encampments, learn how to integrate mobile crisis teams and harm reduction services, and explore system-level partnerships that bridge the gap between crisis response and long-term housing stability. Through real-world scenarios, and cross-sector dialogue, attendees will gain practical tools to develop non-punitive, service-driven responses that promote both community well-being and the rights of unhoused individuals.

Reclaiming Land, Rebuilding Trust: Who Owns the Land and Housing in America's Counties? Should We Care?

Across the United States, the very foundation of land and housing ownership is shifting. With investors now owning a quarter of the single-family housing stock and institutional buyers claiming 30% of mobile home park sites, communities are grappling with displacement, affordability crises, and diminished local control. Meanwhile, policymakers at all levels are urgently seeking ways to reclaim land for public use and build housing that serves people—not just profit.

In this transformative session, Dr. George “Mac” McCarthy of the Lincoln Institute of Land Policy will introduce “Who Owns America,” a powerful platform that tracks land and housing ownership at the parcel level. Learn how this innovative tool enables counties to make informed, data-driven decisions to shape equitable land and housing policies.

Speaker:

- George McCarthy, President and CEO, the Lincoln Institute of Land Policy
- Presentation of NACCED Awards of Excellence & Scholarship
- Election of Officers and Directors
- Preview of 2026 Conference
- Winners of Exhibitor Passport to Prizes announced
